Dear OMG Supporter,

BREAKING: An undercover investigation by O'Keefe Media Group revealed that MSNBC producer Basel Hamdan admitted the network closely aligns with Vice President Kamala Harris's campaign, amplifying her messages as part of their daily coverage.

Hamdan also acknowledged that MSNBC has become indistinguishable from the Democratic Party, raising concerns about the network's objectivity and journalistic integrity.

Through an undercover date, MSNBC producer Basel Hamdan, revealed startling details about the network's role in pushing a partisan agenda.

Hamdan disclosed that MSNBC is not just covering Harris's campaign neutrally, but actively working to support and amplify her messaging. When asked what MSNBC does to assist the Harris campaign, Hamdan responded, "What her message of the day is, is their message of the day," confirming that the network's editorial content is driven by the same talking points used by Harris and her team.

Hamdan went on to admit that MSNBC is doing "all they can to help" Harris win the election, further stating that the network operates as a direct extension of her campaign.

His statement that "MSNBC is indistinguishable from the party" highlights the deep partisan bias behind what is supposed to be objective journalism.

The interview also reveals how intertwined MSNBC is with the Democratic Party at large. According to Hamdan, the type of people who work for Democratic campaigns are the same people who regularly appear as on-air guests. "The people who work... in Democratic politics and in the campaign are a lot of the same type of people that would appear on air on MSNBC," he explained.

This relationship between the network and political figures results in the same messages being repeated across both the media and the political sphere. "If you watch an interview with a Democratic politician, they just finish each other's sentences," Hamdan remarked, further illustrating how tightly aligned the network is with Democratic talking points.

But the most shocking part of Hamdan's admissions was his criticism of MSNBC's viewers. Hamdan didn't hold back, bluntly stating, "They've made their viewers dumber over the years." He explained that the network has narrowed its audience's understanding of the political landscape by avoiding critiques of the Democratic Party. "Even when guests go on the show to criticize Democrats, people get mad at the guests," Hamdan revealed, emphasizing how MSNBC's viewership has been conditioned to reject any negative coverage of the party.

Even more troubling, Hamdan revealed that MSNBC viewers are so brainwashed by the network's coverage that they are unwilling to hear anything that might challenge their views. He shared how the audience reacts negatively to any critique of the Democratic Party, explaining that viewers think, "Maybe they can do wrong, I just don't want to hear about it. Don't say it out loud because if you say it out loud, it helps Trump. So don't say it."

Hamdan's candid admissions raise concerns about the integrity of mainstream media and its role in shaping political narratives. As he pointed out, the network's coverage is not simply biased—it is designed to ensure that the Democratic Party's message is the only one heard. In Hamdan's own words, "MSNBC is the Democratic Party's mouthpiece," an admission that challenges the network's claims of journalistic impartiality.
