Did You Remember 9/11?

By Dr. R. Pletsch

If you are old enough, you remember 9/11 for the attack on the United States by hijacked airplanes. There have been plenty of movies and memorials on TV about this event. Those who are too young to recall can review them on the internet. We will not discuss this event now. There are many ties to our area. Sadly, some relatives of neighbors injured or killed during and after the attack as some first responders died years later due to the toxins that they worked in at Ground Zero.

The remembrance is not political. It is a way to show our neighbors and friends that we will never forget. I hope you have taught your kids to pray for those that need it, not only the dead, but those suffering from both physical and mental issues.

There are probably no religious groups that would find this offensive. No religious group that I have heard of did not take fatalities on that day. Prayers are a universal sign of caring for people. Many friends you have when they feel the need for solace may ask you or relatives to pray for them.

Even people whose family shows little outward faith often use the Cross or Crucifix as a sign of their mourning. In some cases it is a plea that someone died here, please pray for them.

Kentucky-based sculptor Dale Graham uses his background in mathematics and engineering to create sculptures that make us aware of the principles governing the creation of structures and bridges. This aluminum sculpture features a trunnion, a cylindrical pin like that on a cannon that forms the axis on which it pivots, a device also used in bridge design. Graham chose to use lightweight aluminum instead of heavy steel so that his sculpture could be more easily transported from place to place. He burnished the surface of the sculpture so that it reflects light in irregular patterns adding to the "lightness" of the piece. This sculpture has been donated to the Skokie Northshore Sculpture Park by the artist and is now part of the perma-

The "Parks for Pollinators" self-guided nature challenges encourages city dwellers to become citizen scientists and venture out into Chicago Park District's green spaces and their own backyards to identify and document the pollinators and pollinator-friendly plants. The District's Natural Resources Department has identified three locations to help patrons start their nature adventure at Lincoln Park Cultural Center, South Shore Cultural Center Park and Northerly Island Park through Sept. 30th. The observations documented by city residents help identify the pollinators and plants they frequent and are important indicators of the health of urban biodiversity. An observation includes a photo or sound, a description of the pollinator and/or plant, and the date and location of the encounter. Everyone is invited to participate by downloading the iNaturalist app to an Android or iPhone. Patrons may also add their observations online at iNaturalist.org.
