

Prison Ministry Program

The incarcerated men and women in prison frequently look to Ministers for salvation. Some elements of our society like to look at those in jail as the most horrible people on the planet, and America's least sympathetic citizens think they do not deserve any pity, or that they are beyond saving. While it is true that many prisoners commit terrible acts to warrant their presence behind locked cell doors, many of the world's religions teach that no one is beyond saving. The worst of us have opportunities to turn our lives around, and someone who might never get out of prison deserves a chance to turn their life around. New Day Outreach Ministries aims to address those behind bars' spiritual and emotional needs, offering a chance for personal transformation through faith, redemption, and support. The central mission of our prison ministry is to offer spiritual guidance and emotional support to incarcerated individuals, helping them find a sense of purpose, healing, and redemption, presenting the message of faith and the opportunity for a fresh start. While challenges exist, the rewards are immeasurable. The New Day Outreach prison ministry program hopes to create lasting change in the lives of those incarcerated, helping them emerge from the shadows of their past and walk into a future filled with hope, redemption, and purpose. There exists no greater way to save a soul than through the healing power of religion and spirituality. As these individuals find redemption and change their lives, they become ambassadors of hope to others still incarcerated.
